THE DREAM TRAVELER

Written by NandhaXD

> Logline: A reclusive mathematician discovers he can rewrite his past through his dreams, only to find that every "correction" comes with a terrifying price and a reality he no longer recognizes.

I. The Awakening

Sung is a brilliant but isolated freelance mathematician and software developer. While working from home, exhausted by logic and code, he falls into a deep sleep. In the void, an "Unpredictable Face"—a shifting, shadowy entity—appears. It whispers a chilling message: "You are the chosen one."

When Sung wakes, everything seems normal. He returns to his programming, but the line between reality and sleep begins to blur. He suddenly "passes out" and finds himself in the past.

II. The First Travels

The Memory of Her

Sung finds himself in a past conversation with his ex-girlfriend. To check if it is real, he reaches out to touch her hand. The warmth is undeniable. She looks at him, confused, asking why he is acting so strange. Sung realizes he is reliving a conversation he already had, but this time, he can speak differently. Suddenly, his mother knocks him on the head—he was actually asleep on a bench in the present. His remote job has changed; his company now requires him to work in a physical office.

The Office Suspension

While at his new office, Sung falls into a trance again. He is transported to his previous job—the one he lost due to family problems and mistakes. He relives the moment his manager hands him a suspension letter. Sung stands frozen, looking like he has seen a ghost. His manager mocks him: "Why are you stuck? Seen a ghost? Talk!" In the real world, his current supervisor screams at him for sleeping on the job.

III. The Butterfly Effect

Sung meets his old girlfriend at a hotel. As they talk about how their lives turned out, she reveals something shocking: she remembers the "new" past he just created. Realizing he has the power to change his life, Sung goes back to his university years. He retakes his entrance exams in his dream, using his future knowledge to pass with the highest marks.

He wakes up in a new future. He has a high-paying, prestigious job. He is happy—until he looks at his contacts. He is married, but not to the girl he loved. By changing his academic success, he changed the entire timeline of who he met and loved.

IV. The Nightmare Reality

The more Sung travels, the more "terrifying" the dreams become. The people inside his dreams begin to act weirdly. They stop following the script of the past and look directly at him, knowing he is an intruder. Some even try to kill him within the dream to prevent him from ever waking up.

Sung eventually confronts the "God"—the creepy creature from the start. He asks why this power was given to him.

"To let you fulfill your dreams," the creature says. "But even dreams have bad events. Perfection is a lie."

V. Conclusion

Exhausted and terrified of the distorted reality he created, Sung begs the creature to take the power back. He realizes that a life without mistakes isn't life at all. Through a final, grueling mental battle within his own subconscious, Sung rejects the easy fixes of the "Dream Traveler" and wakes up in his original, messy reality. He decides to fix his life through hard work and genuine human connection, finally finding peace.